Writing in my opinion is a hard topic to try and explain to people because everyone has a very different opinion or view on what writing is or what the whole purpose is for. Writing tends to be difficult for me to understand if it doesn't flow or never really states the topic . In my opinion i feel that if you are not a good writer or do not understand what good writers do then it is very hard to stay on the topic you are writing about and you tend to go off on a different topic.

Writing is used to communicate and share an expression of your thoughts. My opinion it is easy to share your thoughts but I have noticed that if you try and share to many thoughts at once it is difficult to place them all how you would think they would flow and then they end up not flowing. When writing it is sharing a permanent way.

Throughout this course i have learned that not all writing is going to be the same and that everyone has a different perspective on what writing is or what it is going to be. I learned that even though i think that my writing is bad someone else might think that it is the best thing that they have ever read. With that being said i think no matter the form of writing you do there is going to be someone out there that thinks differently of your writing. I truly feel that it is all about the way that you learned to read or write is the way that you think it is supposed to look or what it is supposed to say.

While i was reading the chapter i felt the same way as i used to, the one thing that changed was that i opened my perspective about how others view writing.
